GEOLOGIC SURVEYS OF GRANTS PASS

Grants Pass has been the scene of important field work in mining geology by the United States Geological Survey during the past season. A Government party consisting of Mr. J. S. Diller and Prof. G. F. Kay of the Geological Survey, and James Storrs as collector and packer of fossils, with W. G. Moore of this city, took for the camp, recently completed the season's field work on the Grants Pass quadrangle and the geologists have returned to Washington, D. C.

The primary purpose of the investigation is to determine the mineral resources of the region and make them known to the general public, thereby contributing not only to the development of the State but also to that of the whole country. The topographic map of the Grants Pass quadrangle was published last spring by the Geological Survey and formed the basis of the geological field work of this season. With map in hand the geologists visited all the important mines and prospects and studied many of the rocky ledges outcropping in the region traversed. The observations were noted on the topographic map and when the work is completed, a geologic map will be prepared showing the distribution of all the most important kinds of rocks, as well as the location of the most important mines and prospects, so as to illustrate the particular rocks with which certain deposits are associated. It will be readily understood that such a map will show the distribution of the important mineral resources.

The rocks of the region are largely igneous. In ages past they were melted and forced up from the interior of the earth. Many of them were poured out upon the surface as lavas, but many others, like the granite masses about Grants Pass, did not reach the surface. Ore deposits of the precious metals in the region examined are found associated chiefly with igneous rocks.

Interspersed with these rocks, which cover over two thirds of the Grants Pass quadrangle, are masses of slates and sandstones with occasional limestone of which over 40 ledges have been mapped. The great development of the cement industry has largely increased the economic importance of limestone, and the fact that limestones are uncommon in western Oregon gives added interest to those in the Grants Pass region. They are nearest the railroad at Gold Hill and Jacksonville.

It is expected that a preliminary report of the summer's work will be published next spring in "Economic Geology," at which time copies can be obtained free of cost by addressing the director of the Geological Survey at Washington.

Lands to Be Thrown Open.

Orders received at the United States land office in Roseburg from the interior department at Washington, announce the restoration to settlement and entry of 91,840 acres of public land in the Umpqua national forest. Of the total acreage to be thrown open, however, it is estimated that not more than one-fourth will be available for appropriation, the larger part of the land being covered by filings, made before its inclusion in the reserve by President Roosevelt's sweeping order of March 2, 1907. Most of the land lies in Lane county. The remainder is situated in northern Douglas county and southern Benton county. The land will be thrown open to entry on January 21, 1909, but squatting will be permitted 30 days earlier. Most of the unappropriated portion of the tract is valuable chiefly for agricultural or grazing purposes, containing little timber.
